Admission procedures

According to the legislative provisions of the Greek Ministry of Education, admission to the Sociology Department is determined through the National Examination System.

Each academic year, the Sociology Department also admits, through written qualifying examinations, a limited number of university and Technical Education Institutes graduates or holders of recognized diplomas from abroad, in accordance with applicable legal provisions. Students who enter the Department through this provision may apply for the recognition and inclusion in the requirements for the Sociology Department degree of courses they successfully completed in earning their previous degree. The number of courses thus recognized cannot exceed one third of the required courses for the Sociology Department degree. Such applications are subject to approval by the General Assembly of the Department.

Objectives of the Sociology Department

Educational and research objectives:

Sociology is an empirically oriented social science that studies social phenomena in a historical and contemporary perspective. The objective of the curriculum is to equip students with the theoretical and methodological foundations of sociology, as well as enable them to utilize the empirical methods of sociological research. The curriculum is oriented towards the development of autonomous and reflexive sociological thinking in the scientific analysis of social problems and great emphasis is placed on developing students' to reflect on the effects of their activity in social reality. The Department's aim is to provide a theoretically- and methodologically-grounded education with critical knowledge about the social structure, social interaction, and social institutions. Studies in the Sociology Department are structured in such a way as to ensure a wide sociological knowledge, knowledge in particular fields of sociology, and knowledge from other related disciplines of the social sciences.

Career objectives:

Graduates of the Sociology Department can be employed as teachers in secondary education, in local administration authorities, in the wider public sector, and in the private sector. A major asset of the graduates of the Sociology Department when seeking a position in the labor market lies in their capacities as scientists with the appropriate skills to approach contemporary social issues and to formulate and implement research projects that scientifically document and propose ways for dealing with social problems. Sociology graduates are equipped with specialized knowledge that allows them to study changes in social structure in a comparative dimension and to interpret the perceptions and practices adopted by various social groups and social categories of citizens. Towards this end, the curriculum of the Sociology Depart-

Curriculum of the Undergraduate Studies Program

Summary of the Curriculum

The curriculum includes a number of courses covering the wider field of Sociology: theory and methods of sociology, as well as theoretical and analytical knowledge in various sub-fields of the discipline. The Department's strategy is to develop and offer courses that are not only of an introductory- theoretical nature, but have more analytical, empirical, and comparative content.

The Department's Curriculum and the courses it contains, enables students to select and formulate their own individual program of studies. To facilitate this process, the Department has structured the Curriculum based on the following criteria:

- the degree of difficulty and complexity of the course
- the availability of courses that from an epistemological and pedagogical perspective function as prerequisites for selecting other, more complex or more specialized, courses
- the availability of courses offering the absolutely necessary sociological basis for each student of Sociology.

Based on these criteria, the courses are divided into two groups: (a) Core Courses and (b) Direction [Thematic Areas] Courses.

ment places great emphasis on subjects relating to the mastering of current qualitative and quantitative methods of sociological research. In sum, graduates of the Sociology Department are able to seek employment related to the scientific organization and operation of various social institutions and services.

Access to further studies

Graduates of the Sociology Department are qualified to pursue postgraduate studies in the social sciences, either in specific professional fields, or in academically-oriented directions.

A. Core Courses (YPO)

The Core Curriculum includes eleven (11) courses designed to provide basic methodological tools, knowledge and the frame of reference of Sociology and the Social Sciences in general, and an introduction to major sub-fields of the discipline. The Core courses are designed both to provide a comprehensive understanding of the wider discipline of Sociology and to facilitate the transition to specific thematic areas, or Directions, that make up the curriculum. All students are required to complete successfully these courses.

B. Direction Courses (YEK)

The Direction courses cover systematic thematic areas within the broader discipline of Sociology. They offer the possibility of a more comprehensive understanding of these sub-fields and provide students a greater degree of flexibility in choosing their area of specialization .

The Directions are the following four (4):

1. Social Theory - Methodology
2. Social Development - Social Transformation
3. Political Sociology
4. Culture - Labor - Education

C. Elective Lecture Courses (YEP)

These courses constitute the bulk of the subjects contained in the four Directions. When deemed necessary, instructors can determine whether the successful completion of prerequisites is a condition for enrollment in these courses.

D. Elective Seminars (YES)

Seminars are characterized by the relative specialization of the course's subject. They require active student participation in the course, through oral presentations of specific topics and the submission of written assignments. The number of students who can enroll in seminars is limited, ranging from five (5) to twenty (20). Seminars, along with their respective prerequisites, function as an effective means for building student ability to conduct and present independent research, under the guidance and supervision of the instructor.

E. Inter-Departmental Elective Courses (ELE)

Students are offered the option to enroll in courses of their interest that are offered by Departments of the University of Crete or, with the approval of the General Assembly of the Sociology Department, from other Universities or Technical Education Institutes, in Greece or abroad.

F. Foreign Language

A four-term "English for Sociology" course offered by the Department is a required Core Course. By the end of their studies, students must have developed adequate linguistic skills in the English language so as to be able to understand sociological texts. Alternatively, students may choose to learn another language (French, German, Italian, Spanish), offered at the School of Social Sciences, or another School of the University of Crete.

G. Internship

Internships offer a significant opportunity to link theoretical knowledge with empirical reality through student placement at agencies, mostly public services, that participate in the program and deal with issues relevant to the academic subjects taught at The Sociology Department. Through the Internship Program, students are trained in real working conditions and are in a position to acquire valuable work experience. Additionally, the Internship Program mobilizes interest by public and private agencies and companies and contributes towards the development of a network of contacts that can support the integration of Sociology Department graduates to the labor market. Internships are optional and can be approved after the third year of study.

H. Graduate Thesis

The Graduate Thesis is optional and is equivalent to two (2) Electives (YEP) and one (1) Seminar (YES). Upon the recommendation of the faculty member that is to serve as supervisor, the Thesis proposal is subject to approval by the General Assembly of the Sociology Department. Graduate Thesis proposals can be submitted by students who have completed all but are ten (10) or less courses from the total number of courses required for graduation. The subject matter of the Thesis must relate to the student's academic development, as reflected by the courses he/she has completed so far. The completion of the Thesis extends over a two-semester period.

Course Duration:

The duration of the academic semester for each course offered is thirteen (13) weeks. Each class meeting, for both lecture courses and seminars, lasts for three hours per week.

Examination periods

Under current law, the Dean of the School of Social Sciences designates the examination periods, at the end of each semester. An additional period is set at the beginning of the academic year, in September, for all courses offered during the two semesters of the previous academic year.

Course Distribution

The types of courses, a total of 46, required for the award of the Sociology Department degree are distributed as follows:

- eleven (11) mandatory Core courses (YPO)
- four (4) terms of English for Sociology (or another language)
- three (3) Direction courses (YEK)
- sixteen (16) to twenty-two (22) Elective courses (YEP)
- six (6) Seminars
- up to six (6) Inter-Departmental Elective courses (ELE)

NOTE: Inter-Departmental Elective courses (ELE) are optional and can be taken in the place of Sociology Department Elective courses. As mentioned above, the Graduate Thesis and the Internship are optional as well.
